

The Donkey's Journey

The son agreed with what the old woman said. He jumped off the donkey and let his father climb on.

You're right!

Your son is young. He should be riding the donkey, not you!

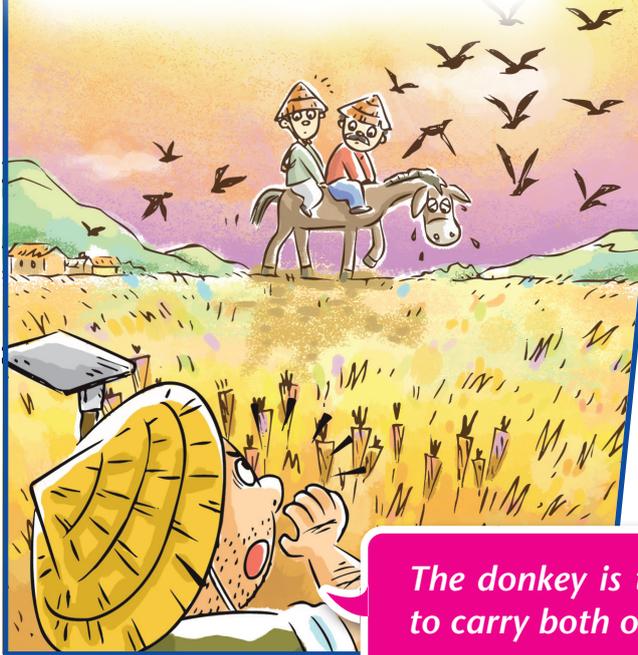

Climb up here, son. Let's ride the donkey together.

Soon after, they met a girl by a well.

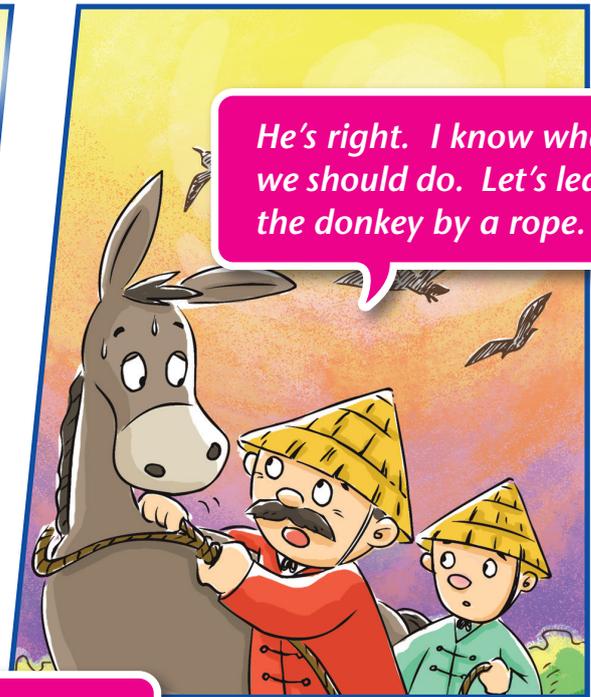

Then they came to a field. A farmer saw them riding the donkey.

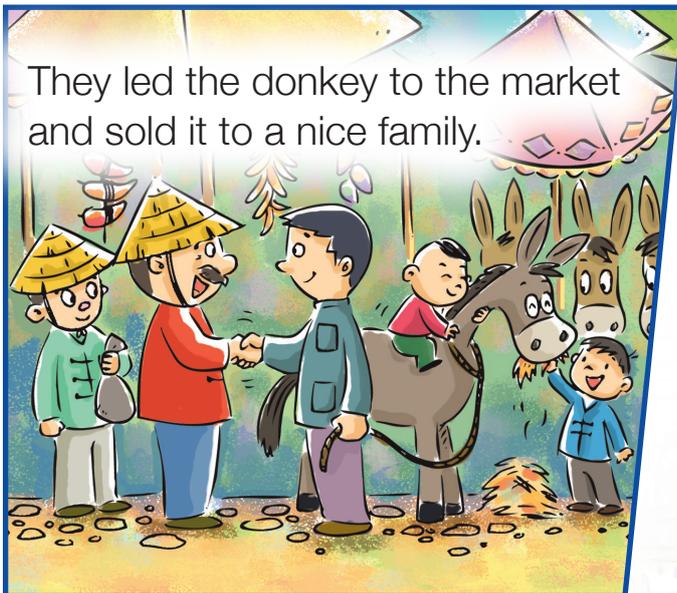

The donkey is too young to carry both of you!

He's right. I know what we should do. Let's lead the donkey by a rope.

They led the donkey to the market and sold it to a nice family.

The man and the son talked about the trip to the market on their way home.

It was silly to listen to all those people.

That's true. You can't please everyone.

The End